

Town and County News.

Mrs. H. A. Campbell has returned from her visit to Traverse City.

The thermometer indicated ten degrees below zero yesterday morning.

There is no apprehension of an ice famine in this country this coming season.

Mr. and Mrs. Bonley nee Mrs. Powell, have returned from their trip outside.

This is a cold morning, was the remark of every body on the streets yesterday morning.

Quite a number of our people were in Charlevoix to attend the dance on Tuesday evening last.

An arrangement of the look of J. H. Mill's safe, obliging him to drill in order to get open.

Mr. Ches. Russell and C. B. Randall are engaged in hauling wood to the railroad for the company.

There were quite a number of fruited and frozen cars carried from the skating rink on Wednesday night last.

Little Travessa was in quite a Sunday recent for Potoskey young men, who are the proud possessors of lady friends and lively rigs.

The skating rink down at the dock seems to be the great attraction this winter.

A typographical error in our issue of last week, made the names of parties having a golden wedding to read Barlow, when it should have been Carlson.

Little Travessa wants to be known in the future as Harbor Springs, and a bill has been introduced in the legislature to have it incorporated under that name.

The dramatic club which expected to have played "The Charcoal Burner" this evening, and tomorrow morning, have postponed their play until Monday and Tuesday night of next week.

Don't be deceived if Little Travessa tracts its population during the coming season.

Mr. Levi Johnson has been appointed Deputy Sheriff at this place, which is a good choice, and no doubt the duties pertaining to that office will be well attended to and he will make an efficient officer.

Mr. Clara Keenan, daughter of Capt. E. C. Post, plays here last evening at the Casino, in Smiths River, Georgia, where she expects to make her home in the future.

Mr. A. L. Grouser is now the only doctor in town, and we believe he was the first one that located here, since which time several have been here and gone away.

Prof. Sweet of Ann Arbor, says he is going to see if he could secure a class in dancing, there are students who desire to learn, there are money and he probably will be able to get a good sized class in this town.

Rev. T. D. Marsh, State Missionary of the Presbyterian Society, delivered a sermon at the Presbyterian church last Sunday morning.

Mr. Marsh has preached several times before, and this sermon was equal to any he has ever preached, and that church is glad to have him here.

Mr. Marsh is a very pleasant man, and the support of the Trinity Church was such an aid as Mr. Marsh.

Mr. Marsh has a family of getting up good numbers, and will no doubt give more of the same kind of satisfaction here.

The Dramatic Club, Monday night and Tuesday night.

Quite large quantities of Machine tools are being caught now-a-days.

Judith Hatch passed through here this week, enroute for Charlevoix to hold court.

On Saturday last Mrs. John Hoblin presented her husband with a valuation weighing 143 pounds.

Perch—An earring which can be had by calling at this office, proving property and paying for this notice.

Mr. Hilliard Ingalls is devoting his time, at Point St Ignace, to the duties pertaining to a veterinary surgeon.

Mr. Henry Clark, of the firm of Harwood and Clark, who is now visiting in the southern part of the State is expected here next week.

The Chicagoan Tribune candidate for circuit judge, will be held at Potoskey on Wednesday next, March 2nd 1881.

John Poppe says that business men before investing their capital will ask "what are your taxes?"

Bad & Garrison of the Boyce City Enterprise have dissolved partnership.

Mr. O. T. Blood left here last Wednesday for Philadelphia, and from there will go to Washington where he expects to be in attendance at the inauguration of Gen. James A. Garfield as President of the United States.

Mr. F. J. Groulath, General Agent for C. Kosterer's celebrated lager was in town last week.

Mrs. Thomas Quintan will go to Richmond on Monday next week, where she expects to meet her husband, and then go to Pennsylvania for her old home, on a visit.

The case of Fox, Muselman & Loveridge vs M. J. Fuller which was to have been tried before Rezaello Reso Justice of the Peace, has been withdrawn on the part of the plaintiffs, and Mr. Fuller stands as though nothing had been done.

The following will explain itself to those who are interested in this matter.

Three ladies who have received notice from the Probate Office that they are to appear before the court to answer to the claims of the deceased, are Mrs. J. H. Miller, Mrs. J. H. Miller, and Mrs. J. H. Miller.

Me. John G. Hill, lawyer and P. F. Ingalls, real estate dealer, have moved their law and real estate office from the Downing block to the Commercial block, the second door south of the office.

"Norman" has again been heard from in the columns of the Charlevoix Sentinel. This time he is disatisfied with river and harbor appropriation bill; he wants the whole log for the river and Charlevoix harbor.

Charles Optant Handy formerly of Charlevoix, Eaton Co. has opened a store on Howard street one door north of Lake St., where they have a fine stock of apples, butter and apple jelly &c which they are selling. They have most excellent butter, made and put up expressly for their sale at reasonable rates. See their "AD," elsewhere.

The Chobogon Tribune delegates the good name of this village and its economy, the Democrat, whether it hasn't heard about it. Perhaps the Tribune could answer some of the propounded questions to its own satisfaction, by republishing the items about horsebacking, fights, the operations of confidence men, pickpockets &c; which appeared in its columns during the past year.

Mr. P. D. Kenney has his new store building on Howard street, two doors north of the Bank, completed, and with its location, beautiful front and commodious salesroom makes it one of the most desirable stores in town. Messrs. Anusack & Young will occupy the store sometime in March, with an exclusive stock of dry goods, consisting of dress goods, carpets and gentlemen's furnishings goods. Mr. Anusack, an experienced merchant, having been in the business many years and will bring a capital new stock of goods, full and complete, and second to none in northern Michigan. Such a store will be a desirable acquisition to our town.

A letter from F. I. Sprague editor of the Traverse Bay Register, informs us that the Peoples' judicial convention will be held at this place on the 2nd of March instead of the 4th, as stated in last weeks Democrat. This is the same time and place of the holding of the Republican convention. We understand that Traverse City chose a set of Read-dell delegates to attend the convention. This makes the republican convention very important. Charlevoix chose delegates, and instructed them to support E. H. Green of that place. Under the present situation it is impossible to tell which will come out ahead, but a "dark horse" may be the outcome.

The correspondent of the Record who signs himself "Town Pump" evidently wrote the article early in the morning after a severe attack of nightingale. Now while we are of the opinion that a frank, candid and fair discussion of the subject is merited and desirable, it is not his business to write a headline as "Town Pump" attempted to do. To achieve the end desired, that is, to bring the subject before our citizens so that they may clearly understand both sides of the question before they are asked to decide, parties contestants should be held and the matter discussed. "Anusack" has made a strong statement in his last weeks Record against water work, he has, however, taken into consideration the interests of those living outside the business part of the town only. "T. discuss and take into consideration the interests of both, and consequently of all our citizens, should be the object of a public meeting. Neither side can lose by a frank and candid discussion.

What is the matter? Our contemporary "takes out" once about the Record has not noticed about the prospective water works, and they say our citizens are foolish. So it may be, but how could any one but a "bill-head" say anything, until there was something to say. It would be something to say.

What do you think of the water work question? The Record would like to hear from some of our citizens on this subject, and we would like to see some of our citizens in our columns to contribute to the question, providing they are sure in by Saturday before our next issue. Read the "AD," and you will begin to tell on the Old Lady to town.

The following is an extract from a book entitled "Border Outlaws," and shows the method of warfare practiced on during the rebellion, by a band of guerrillas under the leadership of the notorious Quantrell, in the southwest. Those of our readers who, who came in contact, during the war, with any guerrilla force, will at once recognize the similitude of their kind of warfare as carried on by these bands.—Ed.

In the latter part of September, (1862) Quantrell's forces were called together for the purpose of reorganization. The policy of the guerrillas was to fight, disband and reorganize; cemented in their fellowship by oaths and obligations, whether separated or united their hearts and arms were ever ready to respond to the needs of their cause. When the winning hour was over, they were to be reorganized through the forests of Missouri, and when the roll was read every name responded with a cheerful "on duty." One hundred and twenty men well armed and mounted, were ready to begin active offensive operations against militia, pillage unguarded posts, capture provision trains and kill—on all.

"Did you hear that shot?" "No, from what direction?" "A little to the west, I think," was the reply. "There's three more in quick succession. Boys, they have struck them sure!"

Poole and Quantrell then put their ears to the ground. "Look out, they are coming on a dead run, for I can hear the clatter of horses' feet," remarked Quantrell. "Get ready, every man, it's a chase for they are firing on the retreat."

Sure enough, there was a pursuit, the sound of horses feet, and the rattle of pistol and guns could not be mistaken. On they came at the head of their speed, the pursuit, with nearly two hundred Federal cavalry thundering in their rear, not two hundred yards behind. At the pits there was a quick turn in the road, and with a swoosh from the clearing of the brush, the four atropid dashes dashed into the woods behind the trenches, leaped from their horses and rushed to the slaughter which had now begun. A sheeted flame broke from the pits as the Federals breasted the line, and horses and riders plunged into the dust, while the air was rent with cries of the wounded and mad stifling with powder smoke.

But the fight did not end with the first volley, for though it was the most rapid, the Federals quickly comprehended the situation, and with reckless bravery, dismounted and began an onslaught on the works. Fighting from behind trees, on the flank, front and rear, the carbines did fearful execution. Within an hour the Federals were reinforced by Col. Hubbard's Sixth Missouri cavalry, of three hundred men, and then the tables of death were turned on the guerrillas. A desperate charge was hurled against the entrenched enemy, which except in the very center of the guns, but a tornado of bullets hurled back the column and left the ground strewn with dead men. Hubbard's battery was equalled only by the fanatic martyr.

"To the front, Charge!" again came the command, and again the blue line advanced with fixed bayonets into the very face of the guerrillas, but again that sheet of flame burst forth from the trenches and the stricken Federals trembled, then fell back in confusion. Charge after charge was made, but each time repelled by that storm-burst of leaden hail. It was folly to fight longer against such disadvantages. Night had approached, but the full moon and a star-decked sky lighted up the battle-ground, and Colonel Quantrell, seeing no possibility of success, fell back for the purpose of surrounding the guerrillas and holding them until the morning. His intentions was, however, anticipated and the ambushes drew off at the first opportunity, carrying their wounded with them, and retreated into the Blue hills where they camped and rested for two days. In this engagement the Federals lost nearly two hundred men, killed in the fight twenty-two, and as many more severely wounded.

After resting and receiving several new recruits Quantrell divided his men into squads and sent them in different directions to harass the Federals and confuse his pursuers. Younger, with twelve men, took the lead, and in a few days they were in the vicinity of Leadville. At a bridge over a little blue, the guerrillas, rear a mounted squad of twenty Federals and the message laid to be made by one person over the dead bodies of the others. In the next day they were in a serious charge to Younger, and his tactics were put into execution at the bridge. Giving the enemy no time to consider, Younger shouted to the charging, and at the top of the hurrahs he led the ranks of the Federals, shooting and slashing like lightning in a herd of buffaloes. Two lots of the twenty escaped, each because of some favor shown Younger in earlier days, and not one of the guerrillas was even wounded.

But fortune did not always favor the former fighters, for the Federals multiplied, and to stay a detachment was like killing flies in summer time, the number seemed undiminished. Pressed on every side, confronted in every road and by-way, driven from every shelter, the guerrillas began to tire; squad-fighting was too dangerous, the pursuing forces of the Federals too numerous, and Quantrell again ordered a meeting at the old rendezvous on the Sky. Every man was there, most of them were in the garrets of their friends' homes, with wounds like church doors; others were bleaching in public roads, in lonely ravines, or sleeping in the misty woods—moved not with the melody of plumed warblers, but the crack of the carbine and the clack of the musket. Started on to the treating, bleeding from bullet scores that had not healed, and when the roll was called again there were still more than a hundred names on the list ready to die.

Poole, Burris, Hubbard, Johnson, Montgomery, Anthony and a score of others had entered into a war which thought not of the subjuggation of the South, only the annihilation of Quantrell and his terrible band. On the first day after leaving the rendezvous, Quantrell met the foe; with the first discharge of pistols and bullets his enemies multiplied by a rush of reinforcements. The retreat was a running fight through Jackson, Cass, Johnson and a dozen other counties.

There was no time to cook or forage, except as they gathered on the countenance of Younger, Shepherd and Gregg became the reliance of Quantrell, without these he could have done nothing but surrender or fight, and fighting die with empty pistols in his grip. These three men, whose unparalleled heroism was their armor, rode in advance or to the rear, wherever their services were most needed, now checking a pursuit by some clever strategy or discombing an ambush, gathering forage for the horses and food for the men, they were the fortune and savior of Quantrell's army.

Near Wellington the guerrillas met three more Federal militia in the highway, and with the first sight came the cry from Younger's charge. The retreat which the militia sounded only helped the slaughter. A few fired at the avalanche and the intrepid Scott was struck badly in the thigh, but he did not leave the saddle. On the charge swept, and when the guerrillas began to cheer for the Federal soldier took his place; out to the right, left, and throats to the front, the fleeing ranks grew thinner, until not a life was spared, and strung along the road for four miles were bleeding corpses, the only product of that retreat.

Whooping to the right to avoid a large force of Federals in the front, Quantrell crossed streams, turning bridges behind him, breaking the trail by riding in branches, and using every precaution to elude pursuit; still he could not rest. Two everywhere and no strategy could steer him clear of disheartened, tired, and faint and dispirited. Between the Sky and Big Blue, with retreat to the rear presented by destroyed bridges, Quantrell rode into the clutches of Col. Barris, a brave Kansas Federal with three hundred men. There was but one way of escape, and that lay in a desperate fight, with the charges three to one against him. Desperate extremities can best be met by desperate acts, and Quantrell was the first to sound the charge with Younger, Shepherd, Todd and Gregg in the advance. Col. Barris was in the valley while Quantrell was coming down the hill, and in fact all the hour of the fight he was killed, and his body was found in the valley.
